Prevention: What's Love Got to Do With it?

February 11, 2015

"One study found that, in junior high and high school, teens who drank alcohol before age 13 were more likely to be both victims and abusers when it comes to physical dating violence. Another study found that teenage girls in abusive relationships are more likely to abuse drugs and alcohol, have eating disorders, engage in unsafe sexual behaviors, and attempt suicide" (NIDA, 2012). Parents, your role is key in reducing these risks.
