Trauma impacts us all: Maybe as a first responder, a survivor, a policy crafter, a neighbor, a teacher, a therapist, a community leader, a voter or as a member of a shared experience we call life. The whole community has an interest, a role and a responsibility in working toward healing. This journey has been designed to help us each individually and then collectively work toward our highest potential. We invite you to join us!

Event Schedule

8:00 – 8:30 Registration/Breakfast (please allow time for registration and getting settled)

8:30 – 8:45 Opening (please be seated prior to 8:30 as we will begin promptly)

$\underline{8:45-12:00}$ (plus breaks) $Keynote\ Presentation$

- Laura van Dernoot Lipsky

We will have an entire morning with the author, speaker and founder of the Trauma Stewardship Institute to discuss caring for ourselves and our community as we respond to our own and others' experience of trauma and the "trauma exposure response". We are diverse caregivers responding to our world, which can feel overflowing with historical, collective, and individual suffering and oppression. We will explore practices to find and return the deep well of wisdom, connection, and self-care to draw the energy we need to engage in work toward healing in the world in a manner that is sustainable and life-affirming.

12:00 - 2:00 Luncheon

Personal Impact

"I can break my career up into two sections thus far: before the book Trauma Stewardship and after. Before, early in my work, I had no formal training on bringing balance into caregiving practice, so I quickly became burned out, and yet I worked harder to try and be better, cultivating resentment, isolation and a broken heart. Luckily, through support of those that care for me, I was able to pause and pivot in my career and in my personal practice – and so much of this was with Laura's book in hand. Since then, I have found a rich and ongoing process of tending to myself and my energy, which allows me to be more effective in my work with those in the community that I aim to serve and be in coalition with.

I've ended up giving away every copy of Trauma Stewardship that I've owned, since experiences like mine are common. But I always end up getting another one, because this work is something that I want to continually revisit – living my values depends on it. It's our hope with CCC&Y that we can build a resilient community of systems and organizations, and within them resilient caregivers with full, and whole, lives."

Plenary Session-Bahney Dedoph, MA

Deputy Director/Director of Communication and Programs/Policy Analyst

AZ Council for Human Service Providers

"Introduction to the Neurosequential Model and its Impact for Arizona" The Science, The Application, The Policy Impact

Dr. Bruce Perry has a long and distinguished history of working with, researching and writing about trauma. Further, he assisted the mainstream discussion of trauma when he was interviewed by Oprah Winfrey in 2018 for 60 Minutes. Bahney will provide an introduction to the Neurosequential Model in Caregiving, a training program created by Dr Bruce Perry with the Arizona Council of Human Service Providers to help foster, kinship, and adoptive parents better understand the unique, sometimes challenging needs of the children in their care who have experienced the trauma of abuse and neglect. They are in the third year of a three-year project designed to create a training curricula that is practical and easily available for parents and the staff who work with them in the child welfare and behavioral health systems of care. In addition to a library of archived videos, they are training facilitators to continue the program statewide. She will also be discussing the planned impacts for the Education system in Arizona.

"Evolution of Trauma: A look at the Influence of Poverty, Culture, and Trauma on the Behavior and Health Disparities of American Indian Youth."

Dr. Pearl Yellowman

(see complete Bio in Luncheon section)

This training will provide a conceptual framework for understanding the contributing factors to the health and learning disparities of American Indian youth. The focus of this presentation is to highlight the contributions of the ecological perspective for understanding students that represent the American Indian and Alaskan Native population. We first explore and examine immediate settings that influence student behavior from birth to early childhood. We expand further on understanding how environmental (i.e., poverty, historical trauma, and Native American cultural beliefs) and developmental (i.e. health and wellness) conditions play a major factor in influencing student behavior and socio-emotional development. This presentation will show the current research on cognitive development, specifically epi-genetics. We will incorporate the use of an ecological approach, since; students actively participate in a variety of contexts (e.g., home, school, community), which provide(s) the setting and experiences that shape their subsequent cognitive, emotional and behavioral development. The use of this model will allow us to distinguish and determine influences of student behavior and to better understand the interaction between the individual and the learning environment.

This approach will assist the audience in focusing on the multiple settings within which the individual exists and how these settings impact the individual's functioning. Lastly, we will look at strategies and successful skill sets that can assist adolescents in navigating their learning environments for optimal growth. Our projected outcome will leave educators understanding and embracing the requirements, expectations and vision of the home, school and community.

"New Parent Stress or Post-Partum Depression?"

Cynthia Barnes RNC MN,

Newborn Development Specialist FMC, HealthySteps Specialist

Research tells us that there is a very significant link between the mental health of parents and their child's development. Unfortunately, this means that children who live with depressed parents are at a higher risk for abuse and neglect. According to the National Institute of Mental Health it is estimated that more than 16 million adults nationwide have experienced depression in the past year. Prevent Child Abuse America reports that 1 in 5 children live with a parent who is depressed.

Most of us think of postpartum depression and the devastation it can have on new moms, but new dads and partners also suffer. Being a new parent is hard. Our culture tends to dismiss postpartum challenges as a normal initiation into parenthood, and sometimes it is. But, for as many as 1 in 4 new dads, and 1 in 7 new moms the stress increases and without help, depression follows.

The thing about spotting PPD is that because new parents are stressed and sleep-deprived, they might not pick up on the signs that their partner is sinking into depression. As friends, families, and the greater community how can we better support new parents? It's so important to recognize depression early. Do you know the signs and symptoms? Depression doesn't always feel like you think it would. It can be very different in men than in women. Let's take a closer look and learn how to help.

DEADLINE TO REGISTER: March 29, 2019 (Your choice to register early helps us tremendously and assures your place- we expect to reach full capacity this year!)
